After the last successful solo exhibition of this

Essex-based painter here in 2005, Dione Page was then ready to discuss with us yet another solo exhibition and stated that her next body of work would be ready to show here in 2011.

And so here we are six years later with what we have come to know and love about this artist, is that her attention to detail is an important factor and this is quite clearly the case in this her fourth solo exhibition at this Ipswich waterfront venue.

The artist's mixed media compositions launch a full-scale offensive on all the senses, where the viewer is bombarded with richness of colour, texture and of patterned fabric, decorative pot, fruit and flowers that constitute the interior still life subjects with the observation out of doors at perhaps a favourite landscape or coastal location.

A graduate of the Colchester School of Art at the time when John O'Connor A.R.C.A was Principal, Dione has held a number of solo exhibitions at notable galleries in West England, Wales, London and East Anglia. Her work has been included in The Royal Academy, The Royal West Academy and The Royal Watercolour Society mixed exhibitions as well as in many public and corporate collections. She was elected for Full Membership of the Royal West of England Academy in 1993.

It is comforting to know that this widely collected painter remains a well-established part of East Anglia's richly artistic populace.

The Festive Season starts here, do not miss this visual feast!

A selection of images from the exhibition may be viewed on the web site from Saturday 3rd December - www.artone.co.uk
